Shopping, dining and San Diego history can all be found at The Headquarters at Seaport right next to Seaport Village. The outdoor space at 789 W. Harbor Drive opens daily at 10 a.m. Visitors can shop at one of many unique stores, grab a bite at one of the eateries or visit the free San Diego Police Department exhibit and jail cells located at the center of The Headquarters. The Headquarters website updates its events calendar regularly to include various activities including art events, yoga classes and foodie gatherings all right at the cool location.

Operators of The Headquarters at Seaport commercial center in downtown San Diego recently signed a lease with Block 16 Hospitality to operate the region's first Flour & Barley Brick Oven Pizza restaurant, set to open this fall.

Lease terms were not disclosed for the new eatery, which will take the space vacated last fall by Pizzeria Mozza. Flour & Barley has its flagship location in Las Vegas.

Officials of The Headquarters' operator, developer Terramar Retail Centers of Carlsbad, said Flour & Barley will move into the space on the western end of the center next to Venissimo Cheese. The existing space will be remodeled in Flour & Barley's signature rustic theme, with a natural wood and brick interior.

The new restaurant will have an outdoor patio, a custom-painted mural at the back bar, marble tabletops, vintage posters and classic black-and-white sports photography. It will be anchored by two red, tile-wrapped wood-fired ovens, and the menu will include pizzas, pasta dishes, salads, Panini sandwiches and craft beers.

The Headquarters opened in fall 2013 following a $40 million renovation of an historic former city police headquarters complex next-door to Seaport Village. Its other current tenants include Eddie V's, Puesto and The Cheesecake Factory.

The center was originally known as The Headquarters at Seaport District, but the last word in that name was recently dropped, a spokeswoman said.
